Geography

Area: 22,965 sq km

Coastline: 386 km

Capital: Belmopan

Belize forms part of the Commonwealth Caribbean, and is located in Central America, bordering Mexico to the north and Guatemala to the west and south. Of 13 Commonwealth member countries in the Americas, only Belize, Canada and Guyana lie on the mainland, three of the most sparsely populated countries in the association; all the others are islands or archipelagos.

Topography: The long east coast is mostly flat with lagoons and mangrove swamps. For 16–32 km out to sea the water is only about five metres deep and a barrier reef (second in size only to Australia's) stretches nearly 297 km, with many tiny islands known as cays or cayes inside. Three smaller reefs lie further out. Inland, the terrain rises with Victoria Peak (1,122 metres), the country's highest point, in the Cockscomb range to the east, and the heavily forested Maya Mountains to the south-west. Continuing north, the Western (Cayo) District is also hilly, with the Mountain Pine Ridge. The northern districts have wide areas of tableland. There are 17 principal rivers, navigable at best only by vessels of shallow draught.

Climate: The climate is subtropical, moderated by trade winds. The average temperature November–January is 24°C and May–September 27°C; inland there is a greater range. There are two dry seasons: March–May and August–September (the Maugre season). Annual rainfall ranges from 1,290 mm in the north to 4,450 mm in the south. The country is susceptible to hurricanes; Hurricane Iris in October 2001 – the fourth in three years – was the worst for 40 years. Several years later in August 2007 another hurricane, Hurricane Dean, hit Belize affecting the livelihoods of up to 2,500 families in the northern parts of the country.

Environment: The most significant environmental issues are deforestation; water pollution from sewage, industrial effluents and agricultural run-off; and solid waste disposal.

Vegetation: Forest covers 61 per cent of the land area and includes rainforest with mahoganies, cayene palms, and many orchids. Higher in the mountains, pine forest and cedar predominate. Arable land comprises three per cent of the land area.

Wildlife: There is a strong emphasis on conservation. By 1992, 18 national parks and reserves had been established, including the world's only jaguar reserve. Other native species include ocelots, pumas, baboons, howler monkeys, toucans and many species of parrot.

Main towns: Belmopan (capital, pop. 18,326 in 2014), Belize City (former capital and commercial centre, 60,184), San Ignacio (20,027), San Pedro (15,484), Orange Walk (13,692), Corozal (11,427), Dangriga (10,002), Benque Viejo (6,497) and Punta Gorda (5,795).

Transport: There is a road network of some 2,870 km, 17 per cent paved, with 1,420 km of all-weather roads. The four main highways are: Northern Highway (Belize City to Chetumal on the Mexican border); Western Highway (Belize City via Belmopan to the Guatemalan border); Hummingbird Highway (Belmopan to Dangriga); and Southern Highway (Dangriga to Punta Gorda).

Belize City is the main port; the international airport, Philip S. W. Goldson, lies 16 km north-west of Belize City.

Society

KEY FACTS 2013

Population per sq km: 14

Life expectancy: 74 years

Net primary enrolment: 96%

Population: 332,000 (2013); 44 per cent of people live in urban areas; growth 2.5 per cent p.a. 1990–2013; birth rate 23 per 1,000 people (40 in 1970); life expectancy 74 years (66 in 1970).

Belizeans descend from Mayans, Caribs, and the many groups who came as loggers, settlers, refugees, slaves and imported labour: English, Spanish, Africans and East Indians.

According to the 2000 census, the population comprises 49 per cent Mestizos (Maya-Spanish), 25 per cent Creoles (Afro-European), 11 per cent Mayans and six per cent Garifuna (Afro-Carib). There is a small Mennonite farming community who speak a dialect of German, and a fast-growing Chinese community.

Language: English is the official language, but Spanish is the most widely spoken first language, and an English-based Creole is widely used. Other languages are Maya, Garifuna and Ketchi. Most Belizeans are bilingual and many trilingual.

Religion: Mainly Christians (Roman Catholics 40 per cent, Pentecostals 8.5 per cent, Seventh Day Adventists 5.5 per cent, Anglicans five per cent, Mennonites, Baptists, Methodists); there are small minorities of Baha'i, Muslims and Jews (2010 census).

Health: Public spending on health was four per cent of GDP in 2012. There are government hospitals in Belize City, Belmopan and other main towns, and health-care centres and mobile clinics in rural areas. Malaria requires constant surveillance. The National Primary Healthcare Centre organises preventive programmes. Some 99 per cent of the population uses an improved drinking water source and 91 per cent have access to adequate sanitation facilities (2012). Infant mortality was 14 per 1,000 live births in 2013

(74 in 1960). In 2013, 1.5 per cent of people aged 15–49 were HIV positive.

Education: Public spending on education was 6.6 per cent of GDP in 2010. There are ten years of compulsory education starting at the age of five. Primary school, which is free of charge, comprises six years and secondary six. Some 91 per cent of pupils complete primary school (2010). The school year starts in September.

The University of Belize opened in 1986. Belize also shares in the regional University of the West Indies, which has its main campuses in Barbados, Jamaica, and Trinidad and Tobago. Galen University at San Ignacio is a private university partnered with the University of Indianapolis in the USA. The female–male ratio for gross enrolment in tertiary education is 1.60:1 (2011).

Media: Weekly newspapers include Amandala (bi-weekly), The Belize Times (People's United Party), The Guardian (United Democratic Party), The Reporter and The San Pedro Sun (published on the island of Ambergris Caye).

Radio stations and TV channels are all privately owned; one radio station is broadcast in Spanish, one is affiliated to the United Democratic Party (Wave Radio), another to the People's United Party (Vibes Radio).

There are 280 personal computers per 1,000 people (2013).

Communications: Country code 501; internet domain '.bz'. Mobile phone coverage is good in most areas, especially on the coast and along the main routes to Mexico and Guatemala.

For every 1,000 people there are 72 landlines, 529 mobile phone subscriptions and 317 internet users (2013).

Public holidays: New Year's Day, Baron Bliss Day (9 March), Labour Day (1 May), Commonwealth Day (24 May), St George's Caye Day (10 September), Independence Day (21 September), Pan-American Day (12 October), Garifuna Settlement Day (19 November), Christmas Day and Boxing Day.

Religious and other festivals whose dates vary from year to year include Carnival (week before Lent), Good Friday and Easter Monday.

Economy

KEY FACTS 2013

GNI: US$1.6bn

GNI p.c.: US$4,660

GDP growth: 2.3% p.a. 2009–13

Inflation: 0.5% p.a. 2009–13

Belize's economy is predominantly agricultural, and it is vulnerable to volatility in world commodity markets. Efforts have been made to diversify from traditional export products such as sugar and timber into bananas, citrus concentrates, seafood and fish products. Forestry has been revitalised and tourism expanded to become a significant foreign currency earner. Since 1990, an export-processing zone has been developed near Belize City International Airport, mainly for clothing production. And, mainly for domestic consumption, a free zone has been established at Corozal on the coast near the Mexican border.

Though Belize had not had a formal relationship with the IMF, it implemented its own structural adjustment programme, with expenditure controls, a public-sector wage freeze and job cuts, and some privatisation, aimed at restoring a fiscal surplus.

There was a short pause in the vigorous economic growth of the early 2000s when, in 2001, the fourth hurricane to strike Belize in three years caused heavy damage to tourist facilities and rice production in the southern part of the country. Another short pause ensued in 2007, when the economy felt the impact of Hurricane Dean on agricultural output and tourism. The recovery of 2008 was then summarily reversed by the world economic downturn and consequent fall in tourism, and the economy stalled in 2009, picking up briskly in 2010–12, with steady growth in 2013–15.

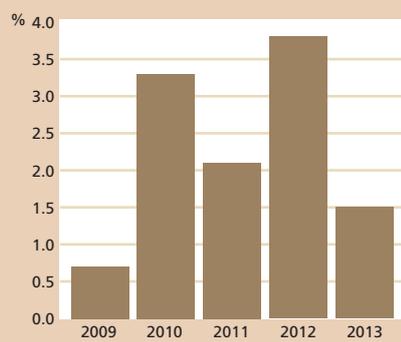

History

The earliest known inhabitants were the Mayans, whose extensive civilisation (250–900 CE) reached its peak in about the eighth century, spreading northward throughout Yucatan. The Mayans cultivated most of the arable land in the country and built cities and ceremonial centres out of limestone. By the time the Spanish arrived, in the early 16th century, the numbers of Mayans had declined, and many of the remainder were sent to Guatemala or died of introduced diseases.

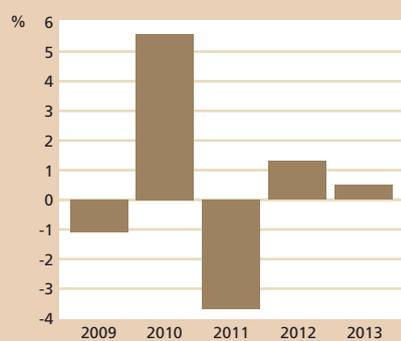

The Spanish then moved north to Mexico, and British pirates (who had lost their occupation when Britain and Spain made peace in 1670) moved in to cut logwood for export to Europe. In time, the settlers expanded inland to cut mahogany and cedar, and African slaves were brought over from Jamaica. Attempts by the Spanish to dislodge the Baymen (as the woodcutters were called) failed, but the settlers asked England for help.

In 1765 Admiral Sir William Burnaby arrived with a fleet from Jamaica and, without recourse to violence, established a constitution known as Burnaby's Code and the Public Meeting, a law-making body. Friction continued, however, until 1798, when the Spanish were defeated at the battle of St George's Caye.

Belize on the international stage

The country's current Prime Minister, Dean Barrow, is the first of African descent.

California-born NBA basketball player, Milton Palacio has Belizean parents and played in the Belize gold medal winning team at the 1998 CARICOM Basketball Championship, hosted by Belize.

Poet, author and sculptor George Gabb was born in Belize in 1928.

In 1847, Mayans in neighbouring Mexico rebelled against Spanish rule and refugees (Mayans, Mestizos and dissident Spaniards) made their way into Belize, a migration which set up new tensions. In an attempt to resolve the situation, the settlement, at its own request, became a British colony (supervised by the Governor of Jamaica) in 1862 and the country took the name British Honduras. It became a Crown colony in 1870. In 1884, it was detached from Jamaica and given its own governor. Burnaby's Code and the Public Meeting were abolished in 1840 and 1853 respectively and replaced by a nominated legislative council.

Economic recession followed. Mahogany prices slumped in the 1870s and sugar (introduced by the immigrants from Mexico) slumped in the 1880s. An upturn in the early 20th century was short-lived and poverty continued between the world wars.

In 1935, the principle of voting was reintroduced, with elections for five of the 12 seats on the legislative council, although with a very limited franchise (1,000 out of the population of 50,000). The number of elected members increased under a new constitution in 1954, when the council changed its name to Legislative Assembly and extended the franchise to universal adult suffrage. By now the movement for independence was under way; it had gained momentum in 1949 when the British Honduras dollar was devalued. This became a rallying point with the cry: 'Give us back our dollar. Give us independence.'

In 1954 the first general election was won by the People's United Party (PUP), headed by George Price (the PUP won all subsequent elections until 1984). In 1964, the country became self-governing with a bicameral legislature. In 1971, the seat of government was moved from Belize City to the new inland site of Belmopan. In 1961 Hurricane Hattie left Belize City in ruins. The country's name was changed from British Honduras to Belize in 1973.

Independence was delayed by the claim to the whole of its territory by neighbouring Guatemala and in 1975 and 1977 British troops and aircraft were used to protect Belize from the threat of invasion. The UN passed several resolutions asserting Belize's right to its sovereignty and territorial integrity. By the late 1970s, although the claim was unresolved, constitutional talks on independence were successful, and the UK agreed to provide a defence guarantee, notably by patrolling the border with Guatemala.

After 20 years in power, George Price and the PUP lost the 1984 elections to the United Democratic Party (UDP) led by Manuel Esquivel; returned to government in 1989; and were ousted again in 1993 by UDP in coalition with the National Alliance for Belizean Rights, a new party which was formed after five members left the UDP in 1992 following disagreements over the negotiations with Guatemala.

Relations with Guatemala

From 1986 relations between the two countries improved and in 1991 Guatemala recognised Belizean sovereignty, Belize joined the Organization of American States (OAS) and diplomatic relations between Belize and Guatemala were established.

In January 1994 responsibility for defence was transferred to the Belize Defence Force and later that year the UK withdrew most of its 1,500-strong garrison. In March 1994, however, Guatemala renounced its earlier agreements and formally reaffirmed its claim to the territory of Belize. A tense period ensued during which Belize continued to receive strong support from the Caribbean Community and the Commonwealth.

It was thus not until February 1997 that an ambassador was sent to Guatemala City, opening the way for a diplomatic resolution of the dispute. The two countries embarked, through the good offices of the OAS, on a peace process leading, in September 2005, to agreement on a framework for negotiations to resolve the dispute and confidence-building measures. Included in this agreement was a mechanism, should the parties fail to reach agreement in negotiations, to allow recourse to an international judicial body.

Constitution

Status: Monarchy under Queen Elizabeth II

Legislature: National Assembly of Belize

Independence: 21 September 1981

Belize is a parliamentary democracy and constitutional monarchy which recognises

Queen Elizabeth II as head of state, represented by a Governor-General. The Governor-General, appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister, must be of Belizean nationality. The legislature, the National Assembly, is bicameral, composed of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate has 12 members (plus the President of the Senate): six are appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister, three on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition, and one each by the churches, business community and trade unions.

The House of Representatives comprises 31 members, directly elected at intervals of no longer than five years on the basis of universal adult suffrage (plus the Speaker). The Prime Minister and cabinet have executive power.

There are six administrative districts. With the exception of Belize City, they are administered by a locally elected town board of seven members. The island resort of San Pedro on Ambergris Caye was granted township status in 1984. Belize City is administered by a city council of nine elected members. There are also village councils.

(UDP) took three seats and Esquivel handed over the party leadership to Dean Barrow.

For the first time since independence, the ruling party was returned to power in the March 2003 general election. The PUP took 22 seats to the UDP's seven, and Musa resumed as Prime Minister.

In January 2005 the government increased tax rates on commodities and property and riots broke out. Civil unrest continued until April with trade unions and government opponents demanding Musa's resignation. This and allegations of corruption in the PUP government proved decisive in the subsequent elections.

The February 2008 general election resulted in a landslide victory for the opposition UDP, which won 25 seats to the ruling PUP's six. UDP leader Barrow became the country's first Prime Minister of African descent.

The general election in March 2012 was again won by Barrow and the UDP with 17 seats, the PUP taking 14.

Barrow and the UDP were returned in an early general election on 4 November 2015. They secured 19 seats (with 50.0 per cent of the votes cast) and the PUP 12 seats (47.3 per cent). Turnout was 73 per cent.

International relations

Belize is a member of the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, Association of Caribbean States, Caribbean Community, Non-Aligned Movement, Organization of American States, United Nations and World Trade Organization.

Belize is strengthening its links with its Central American neighbours through its membership of the Sistema de la Integración Centroamericana.

Traveller information

Immigration and customs: Passports must be valid for at least six months from the date of departure. Visas are required by most Commonwealth nationals. Prohibited imports include some food, pre-Columbian articles, marine products, unprocessed coral and turtle shells.

Travel within the country: Traffic drives on the right and visitors can hire cars with a foreign driving licence for the first three months of stay. All-weather highways link the main towns.

Scheduled flights operate from Belize City to the main towns and islands. Boat services connect Belize City to the main islands. Regular bus services link most towns and villages.

Travel health: Prevalent diseases where appropriate precautionary measures are recommended include dengue fever, hepatitis A, hepatitis B, malaria, rabies and typhoid.

There were 294,000 tourist arrivals in 2013.
